

Moving beyond the Physical in Martial Arts
(Workshop 2 - Discovering the Substance of Waveform)
(MA workshop Loch Lomond September 2/3)

This group was initially set up to explore and develop Waveform within the martial arts.

After our success of the first meeting (Moving beyond the Physical in Martial Arts) the second meeting was excitedly anticipated.

The outcomes for the weekend were more than achieved; however there were also a few surprises in store for us.

We were delighted to have the services of a professional cameraman for the weekend so that we could record on film all that happened. This was to help us with analysis, and so we could show another aspect/dimension of Waveform at Waveform workshops. \(We are hoping to have a DVD of this weekend ready for showing at Waveform 1 at Holycombe on 23/24 September\).

We were also joined by Chris, an old friend, electronics engineer and life-long cynic. Chris had attended a Waveform 1 course earlier in the year out of curiosity, and in the belief that I was not entirely mad. He left the Waveform 1 workshop with the realisation of receptors and, from then on, we heard the oft repeated words, "This is really weird, Mike!"

Chris contacted me about ten days after his Waveform 1 course with a theory about the substance of the energy that were working with and also gave reasons for this.

As a result of our conversations Chris was invited to attend the MA workshop with a device that he had made, in order to test his hypothesis about the substance of Waveform with our MA group, and also what we had achieved so far.

Chris was also curious to see what else might be revealed, particularly as the action plus the working of his device, which detects movement in the surrounding area, was all to be recorded on film.

As every one was arriving at Loch Lomond from various part of the country on the Friday, we commenced filming on Saturday morning, outside and in torrential rain. Thankfully we were able to continue in the afternoon, in a large lecture room provided by the Gateway Centre at Lomond Shores.

Although the conditions were quite different between the morning and the afternoon sessions, and most certainly different to those of our first workshop outside in the warmth and sunlight, it gave us a chance to compare and analyse the differences in our performance and 'success' rate, and also any anomalies that may appear - as they most certainly did.

Our main outcomes were -

- a) Can someone detect the movement of another person in the area without the use of the five senses?
- b) Can a person detect the intent to harm without the use of the five senses?

A range of situations were created, and in some cases physical barriers were placed between the participants to further test the situations.

All was recorded on film and monitored with Chris's device with lights that came on when a physical movement was detected and also a buzzer (which remained switched off during the test sessions).

Our results were very consistent with movement detected by Chris's device, even down to the differences that appeared between the morning and afternoon sessions. Chris was delighted with these results as it proved to a greater degree that some aspects of waveform are active within the area of natural law that he had suspected.

However there were some actions that were captured on film that worked outside of this natural law.

The attacker not moving - the light going on and the defenders hand going up to indicate movement. (No-one except the attacker was within the range of the monitor)

The monitor can only detect physical movement and therefore cannot detect the difference between intent to attack, and no intent to attack, which was correctly identified by the defenders.

Two defenders detecting an intent to attack, with a solid physical barrier between them and an attacker – (There was an interesting and unexpected variation on this, which was captured on camera)
This and other situations indicated that the defenders were accessing the attacking person's state of mind (which was the idea) and changes of mind, again, captured on camera.

All members of the group felt that the outcomes for the weekend had been successfully achieved.

As a result of what he had seen this weekend Chris also gave us an unexpected preview of what the 'Mark 2' device will be able to monitor. It is absolutely brilliant!

Leaving the final word to Chris," Whilst we now have some strong evidence as to the natural law which Waveform practitioners are accessing and obtaining information from, it is not yet conclusive. What is clearly evident is however that they are obtaining information by other means, one of them possibly being mind to mind".
